

Abdullah ibn Umar (radhiAllahu anhu)

Son of al-Farooq

From an early age, Abdullah ibn Umar showed his keenness to be associated with the Prophet in all his undertakings. He had accepted Islam before he was ten years old and had made the Hijrah with his father, Umar ibn al-Khattab and his sister, Hafsa, who was later to become a wife of the Prophet (sallallahu alayhi wa sallam).

"The Good One, son of the Good One"

From the time of his hijrah till the time of his death more than seventy years later, Abdullah ibn Umar distinguished himself in the service of Islam and was regarded among Muslims as "the Good One, son of the Good One", according to Abu Musa al-Ash`ari. He was known for his knowledge, his humility, his generosity, his piety, his truthfulness, and his constancy in acts of ibadah (worship).

From his great and illustrious father, Umar, he learnt a great deal and both he and his father had the benefit of learning from the greatest teacher of all, the Messenger of Allah (sallallahu alayhi wa salam). Abdullah would closely listen to and watch every saying and action of the Prophet and he would practice what he observed closely and with devotion.

For example, if Abdullah saw the Prophet performing Salah in a particular place, he would later pray in the same place. If he saw the Prophet making a supplication while standing, he would also make a dua while standing. If he saw him making a dua while sitting, he would do the same.

On a journey if he saw the Prophet descend from his camel at a particular place and pray two rakats, and he had occasion to pass on the same route, he would stop at the same place and pray two rakats. In a particular place in Makkah, he once observed the Prophet's camel making two complete turns before he dismounted and prayed two rakats. It might be that the camel did that involuntarily but Abdullah ibn Umar when he happened to be in the same place at another time, made his camel complete two turns before making it kneel and dismounting. He then prayed two rakats in precisely the same manner as he had seen the Prophet do.

Aishah, radhiAllahu anha, noticed this devotion of Abdullah to the Prophet and remarked: "There was no one who followed the footsteps of the Prophet, may God bless him and grant him peace, in the places where he alighted as did Ibn Umar."

His Fear of Allah

In spite of his close observance of the Prophet's actions, Abdullah was extremely cautious, even afraid, of reporting the sayings of the Prophet. He would only relate a hadith if he was completely sure that he remembered every word of it. One of his contemporaries said:

"Among the companions of the Prophet, no one was more cautious about adding to or subtracting from the hadith of the Prophet than Abdullah ibn Umar."

Similarly he was extremely cautious and reluctant to make legal judgments (fatwas).¹ Once someone came to him asking for a judgment on a particular matter and Abdullah ibn Umar replied: "I have no knowledge of what you ask." The man went on his way and Abdullah clapped his hands in glee and said to himself: "The son of Umar was asked about what he does not know and he said: I do not know."

Because of this attitude he was reluctant to be a qadhi (judge) even though he was well qualified to be one. The position of qadhi (judge) was one of the most important and respectable positions in the Muslim society and state bringing with it honor, glory and even riches but he declined this position when it was offered him by the Khalifah Uthman (radhiAllahu anhu).

His reason for so doing was because of his fear of committing errors of judgment in matters pertaining to Islam. Uthman (radhiAllahu anhu) made him agree not to disclose his decision lest it might influence the many other companions of the Prophet who actually performed the duties of judges.

Brother of the Night

Abdullah ibn Umar (radhiAllahu anhu) was once described as the "brother of the night." He would stay up at night performing Salat, weeping and seeking Allah's forgiveness and reading Quran. To his sister, Hafsa (radhiAllahu anha), the Prophet once said: "What a blessed man is Abdullah. Should he perform Salat at night he would be blessed even more."

From that day, Abdullah did not abandon qiyamul-layl (standing up at night in prayer) whether at home or on journeys. In the stillness of the nights, he would remember Allah much, perform Salat and read the Quran and weep.

Crying Out of the Fear of Allah

Like his father, tears came readily to his eyes especially when he heard the warning verses of the Quran. Ubayd ibn Umayr has related that one day he read these verses to Abdullah ibn Umar:

"How then (will the sinners be on Judgment Day) when We shall bring forward witnesses from within every community and bring you (O Prophet) as witness against them? Those who denied the truth and paid no heed to the Prophet will on that Day wish that the earth would swallow them but they shall not (be able to) conceal from Allah anything that has happened." (Surah an-Nisa, 4:41-42).

Abdullah cried on listening to these verses until his beard was moist with tears.

One day, he was sitting among some close friends and he read: "Woe unto those who give short measure, those who, when they are to receive their due from people, demand that it be given in full but when they have to measure or weigh whatever they owe to others, give less than what is due. Do they not know that they are bound to be raised from the dead (and called to account) on an awesome Day, the Day when all men shall stand before the Sustainer of all the worlds?" (The Quran, Surah al Mutaffifin, 83: 1-6). At this point he kept on repeating "the Day when all men shall stand before the Sustainer of all the worlds" over and over again and weeping until he was faint.

Simple and Humble Life of Generosity

Piety, simplicity and generosity combined in Abdullah to make him a person who was highly respected by the companions and those who came after them. He gave generously and did not mind parting with wealth even if he himself would fall in want as a result. He was a successful and trustworthy businessman throughout his life. He used to have a good amount of wealth which he would often spend on the poor and those in need.

Ayyub ibn Wa'il ar-Rasibi recounted one incident of his generosity:

One day Umar received four thousand dirhams and a velvet blanket. The following day Ayyub saw him in the marketplace buying fodder for his camel on credit. Ayyub then went to Abdullah's family and asked:

"Didn't Abu Abdur-Rahman (meaning Abdullah ibn Umar) get four thousand dirhams and a blanket yesterday?" "Yes, indeed," they replied.

"But I saw him today in the marketplace buying fodder for his camel and he had no money to pay for it."

"Before nightfall yesterday, he had given all away all the wealth he received. He took the blanket and threw it over his shoulder and went out. When he returned it was not with him. We asked him about it and he said that he had given it to a poor person," they explained.

Abdullah ibn Umar encouraged the feeding and the helping of the poor and the needy. Often when he ate, there were orphans and poor people eating with him. He rebuked his children for treating the rich and ignoring the poor. He once said to them: "You invite the rich and forsake the poor."

For Abdullah, wealth was a servant not a master. It was a means towards attaining the necessities of life, not for acquiring luxuries. He was helped in this attitude by his simplicity and humble life-style. One of his friends who came from Khurasan once brought him a fine elegant piece of clothing:

"I have brought this thawb for you from Khurasan," he said. "It would certainly bring coolness to your eyes. I suggest that you take off these coarse clothes you have and put on this beautiful thawb."

"Show it to me then," said Abdullah and on touching it he asked: "Is it silk?" "No, it is cotton," replied his friend.

For a little while, Abdullah was pleased. Then with his right hand he pushed away the thawb and said: "No! I am afraid for myself. I fear that it shall make arrogant and boastful. And God does not love the arrogant boaster."

Maymun ibn Mahran relates the following: "I entered the house of Ibn Umar. I estimated everything in his house including his bed, his blanket, his carpet and everything else in it. What I found was not even worth a hundred dirhams." He passed away in the age of 84 years old. May Allah be pleased with him.
